More concentrated than Kathleen's debut, Wright's second entry begins to develop a detective who can shine through all those costume changes.

Melodie Johnson Howe, author of City of Mirrors:

A complex tale filled with humor and sharply drawn characters, Erica Wright takes the reader on a thrilling ride where confronting evil can scare you into hiding or help you come out of the shadows.

This brisk, dark, slinky sequel to Erica Wright's first P.I. novel, The Red Chameleon, again features the winning Kathleen Stone, former cop and current private detective...Kat is a worthy heir to Sam Spade and Lew Archer, sharing their black coffee humor (offered sedatives or painkillers by a paramedic, she replies Both) and underlying humanity...The Granite Moth confirms that Wright, an editor at the prestigious literary magazine Guernica, has a very promising second career on her hands.
